Instructions

We suggest starting with the 'Wake Up' activity "Is my City Accessible?" so everyone in the group is aware of the rules of accessibility in your area.

For this activity, participants will go outside to investigate how accessible their area is.

They should choose in advance what type of accessibility they're looking for and have one or two group members simulate this disability. For example, if a group is checking for accessibility for the blind, have one person in the group wear a blindfold during the activity.

If they discover issues during the activity they should take a picture and note precisely what and where the issues are.

At the end of the day, collect together all the information and pictures the group took, and take or send them to the Mayor or local council to make them aware of the problems.
