Instructions

The clothing industry is the second most polluting industry in the world, after the oil industry. Mainly because of fast fashion which is the very rapid renewal of collections among the giants of low-cost fashion. The production of clothes requires a lot of non-renewable resources (water, oil...), very bad working conditions to guarantee a very low price and polluting transport to get them to the different points of sale.

The goal of this activity is to host a clothing swap. Participants should each bring in some clothes that are in good condition, that they don't wear anymore. During the meeting, participants can choose something new to bring home.

If there are any clothes left over at the end of the meeting, take them to a local charity.
