Instructions

Begin by talking to the group about strengths and weaknesses, how every person has both and that's okay.

Give each participant a sheet of paper and have them write down what they think their strengths and weaknesses are, such as I'm a good listener, I'm good at telling stories, I arrive late, I am untidy etc.

Bring the group back together and discuss what the participants think they are strong and weak at. Other members of the group can suggest things to add to each other's list. When everyone has finished their list, ask the group what they think is needed to create a good partnership. Explain that one of the most important things is finding someone who balances your strengths and weaknesses. For example, if you're bad at concentrating, a good partner for you might be someone who is good at concentrating etc.

Give the group 10 minutes to find their perfect partner in the group, and then have them explain why they paired up with that person. Encourage the participants to choose based on strengths and weakness rather than picking their best friend!

Debrief:

- ▶ What do you think is a task that would be easier to complete with your new partner?
- ▶ Do you know any famous partnerships? What way do you think they were good/not good?
- ▶ What ways do you think groups or companies can work together to help the UN SDGs?
