Instructions

If possible, find a farmer in the area who has an organic farm. Go and visit their farm to find out how and why they decided to work organically.

If there is no organic farm around them, have the participants research what organic farming is, how it works etc.

When they have completed their visit and or research, challenge the group to try and create their own mini farm.

Have participants choose some fruit or vegetables to grow, either at home or at their meeting place. Participants should use what they learned about farming to help them successfully grow their crops.

Have participants choose what they will do with their successfully grown food, they could use them for meals at home, for a cookout during a meeting, or donate them to a group that is making food for those in need.
